In intimate ethnographic detail, the author brings to life the experiences of these older labour migrants by sharing in the life of the hostels as a resident, by observing their quarters the men's family life on the other side of the Mediterranean as a guest in their homes, and even by accompanying their travels by bus, sea, and air. The monograph evaluates several theories of migration against rich qualitative data gathered from three methods: biographical narrative and semi-structured interviews, participant observation, and archival research. In the process, it offers a thoughtful contribution to broader debates on what it means for migrants to belong and achieve inclusion in society. This Ekurhuleni Jun 19 2021 The first academic work to provide an historical account and explanation of the development of this region to the east of Johannesburg since its origins at the end of the nineteenth century. From the time of the discovery of gold until the turn of the twenty-first century, the region comprised a number of distinctive towns, all with their own histories. In 1994, these towns were amalgamated into a single metropolitan area, but, unlike its counterparts across the country, it does not cohere to a single identity. Drawing on a significant body of academic work as well as original research by the authors, the book traces and examines some of the salient historical strands that constituted what was formerly known as the East Rand and suggests that notwithstanding important differences between towns and the racial fragmentation generated by apartheid, the region's history contains significant common features. Arguably, its centrality as a major mining area and then as the country's engineering hub gave Ekurhuleni an overarching distinctive economic character.
